To address the demand for innovative leaders of our time, our doctoral program aims to expand the concrete connotations of contemporary visual cultural practices and embody cultural diversity as its educational goal. We are dedicated to cultivating practical leaders in art innovation and entrepreneurship, without predefining any artistic system or cultural paradigm. Through interdisciplinary thinking and flexible teaching methods, combined with the teaching resources of other departments' doctoral and master's programs in our university and the collaboration of internationally renowned faculty, our curriculum is divided into "Creative Practice Research" and "Arts and Culture Practical Research and Application" groups. In addition to providing graduate students with advanced professional skills in interdisciplinary creation, we also impart knowledge of management in the context of contemporary cultural economies in consumer societies. We inspire graduate students to rethink the forms and platforms of artistic production and actively transform them functionally, breaking away from the inertia of art and cultural production intermediaries, and thus redefining the social roles of artists in the 21st century.
